for the dissertation of Abdiman Zhaniya Omirkhankyzy
"Inaugural Address as a Part of Political Discourse" submitted for the candidacy of a degree of Doctor of Philosophy degree (PhD) in "6D021000 - Foreign Philology"

Zh. Abdiman has made a commendable and successful effort in a new level of analysis and generalization that aligns with modern developments in world linguistics, aiming to provide a comprehensive overview of the genre features of the inaugural addresses of the presidents of the USA and Kazakhstan.

Choosing the study's object required immersion in a shifting political landscape, the emergence of new priorities, and new leaders—all of which were reflected in the complex environment of the inauguration ceremony over nearly thirty years. Zh. Abdiman accomplished this without being a political scientist.

Zh. Abdiman studied the texts of the solemn ceremony from different perspectives, and a comprehensive analysis led to the identification of their main features in the form of proposed provisions for defense. Each dissertation result is verified and persuasive, supported by numerous examples from 15 Inaugural Addresses of the presidents of both countries.

It is known that scientific propositions must allow for the essential possibility of refutation and assume specific procedures for their confirmation. In this respect, we have an excellent example of empirical confirmation of the proposed provisions. The study presented by Zh. Abdiman can be classified as an independent scientific work that possesses all the necessary attributes of new theoretical knowledge, an expanded system of valid linguistic facts, convincing argumentation for the propositions, logical integrity and completeness, all presented in a sufficiently reasoned and explicit manner.

All formal requirements for the PhD program of Zh. Abdiman has been successfully completed. The necessary publications are available, and reports and presentations have been delivered at international conferences. It can be rightfully stated that the main provisions of the dissertation are known to the scientific community.

The degree of validity, reliability, novelty, and both theoretical and practical significance of the conclusions and scientific provisions of Zh. Abdiman's dissertation, titled "Inaugural Address as a Part of Political Discourse," submitted for the degree of Doctor of Philosophy (PhD) degree in "6D021000 – Foreign Philology," meets the essential requirements imposed on works of this nature.

Altogether, this serves as an objective basis for recommending the dissertation of Zh. Abdiman "Inaugural Address as a Part of Political Discourse" for defense.
